Houston . . . Detroit?

February 2, 2021

Houston will not become “The New Detroit”.

We are wildcatters. We change. And we profit from change. That’s our history. That’s our future.

Zero-Emission Petrochemical Facilities and New Energy and Manufacturing Export Products

Bezos, Musk, Anderson …

Which visionary’s plan do you like?

Goal: Zero-Emissions Industry on Earth

Industry doesn’t want to pollute. They’ve never wanted to pollute. What’s fascinating is that we are arriving at an inflection point in environmental history. It’s becoming cheaper with technological innovation to proactively address one’s own pollution on one’s own terms than re-actively respond to laws and rules. It’s very different than environmental progress made from the 1960’s-2010’s (statutory and rules based).

Beyond compliance. Beyond regulation. Beyond wonderful.

My plan, like Musk’s and Bezos’, is also in its early implementation stages:

A quantum AI environmental protection system

- Petabytes of environmental textual data being scraped and machine learning applied
- Remote sensing systems integrated into AI data gathering and intelligence analysis platform (automated drones, open-path FTIR, fixed optical gas imaging, satellites)

The world's largest industrial emissions reduction project

- Service contracts with 3 petrochemical companies under negotiation
- Option on 450 acre industrial tract secured and due diligence completed

In order to climb the "Mount Everests" of life, one must first form a vision and a working hypothesis that the mountain is indeed climbable. If you cannot form this hypothesis, you are doomed before you start (in fact, you'll never start). Second, one must have the discipline to then walk that vision back to its earliest foot steps. Third, and most important of all … one must step.
